Tommy Felix focuses his practice on general corporate representation of both issuers and underwriters, focusing on public and private capital markets transactions and bank financings, including initial public offerings (IPOs), follow-on offerings of debt and equity securities, at-the-market offerings, private placement debt offerings, convertible debt offerings and institutional loans. He also represents lenders including investment banks, hedge funds, private equity firms and venture capital firms in the documenting and negotiating technology, life sciences and middle-market financing transactions.

Tommy regularly advises public companies with respect to securities law compliance, disclosure and reporting obligations, as well as corporate governance and other general corporate law matters. Tommy has experience in large credit transactions, both high-yield and investment grade, as well as mergers and acquisitions.

Tommy has practiced in a variety of industries, including energy, financial services, gaming, retail, technology, biotechnology, medical devices, telecommunications and transportation.
