The year 2017 has ended with legislative changes in real estate sector, particularly cancellation of the categories of complexity of construction and declarations on commencement of construction works, and others. And we should see further real estate reforms in 2018 as the formation of a new legislative framework may lead to infrastructure projects development.

Oleg Milchenko, senior associate at DLA Piper Ukraine, highlights at a glance the main legislative initiatives that were adopted in real estate sector within 2017-2018. This article was originally published in at URE Club web-site and is reproduced with permission.
