In the post-COVID-19 era, more and more employees are working from home, and these days that home may be abroad. At the same time, some companies are considering shuttering their physical offices. The road ahead is full of challenges and opportunities for company leadership and enterprise risk management.

Companies must consider how they can position themselves to address the new realities and continue to succeed through and beyond the crisis, while balancing the needs of the business, its people and its customers.

Thank you for joining us for a discussion on managing expected changes to business operations in multi-location and multi-jurisdictional environments. Our speakers covered such topics as:

- Corporate and regulatory requirements related to maintaining office space in various countries
- Tax considerations when reducing office space and related permanent establishment issues
- Employment requirements such as employee notification, consent and collective consultation requirements
- Corporate entity structure and global business model implications
