Carolyn Bigg is an experienced technology and communications lawyer, with a particular focus on data protection, data retention and data security law across the Asia Pacific region.

Carolyn regularly advises businesses on the best practice approach to regional and international data privacy compliance, as well as co-ordinating multi-jurisdictional data privacy projects.

She also advises on all forms of technology and communications contracts, and has significant experience in complex outsourcing projects, systems supply and integration agreements and e-commerce, acting for both users and suppliers in the technology, telecommunications, banking, insurance and other sectors, as well as on related regulatory issues.

Carolyn has been involved in a wide variety of general commercial projects, including joint ventures, agency, distribution, licensing and franchising arrangements. She has industry and in-house experience from client secondments to an international telecoms operator, a US software house, a forensic service provider and a global insurer.
