Christoph Engelmann advises national and international companies on gambling and media law as well as in other regulated areas of law. His practice focuses on gambling law, broadcasting law (including protection of minors and advertising), new media law and telecommunications law. To enforce the law, he represents his clients before regulatory authorities (including gambling authorities, state media authorities and the Federal Network Agency) and administrative courts.

He also defends national and international companies in various regulated industries in administrative offence proceedings against corporate fines, including in broadcasting law and data protection law.

In addition, Christoph Engelmann advises international companies on payment service law issues in relation to the EU Payment Services Directive (PSD2).
