Andrea Grant has for many years practiced before numerous agencies of the Federal Government and the United State Congress.

Andrea concentrates in the fields of energy and environment before the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), the Departments of Energy, Treasury, Homeland Security and Transportation, as well as numerous congressional committees. In addition, her work has focused on several significant trade and transportation issues.

On behalf of the petroleum industry, she has worked on such energy and environmental issues as renewable fuels, air quality standards, US policy on petroleum and renewable fuel imports, federal excise taxes and climate change legislation and regulations.

Andrea has managed a number of complex projects involving federal and state legislation and regulations, international negotiations, litigation, and economic and public relations support. She has applied this experience to issues relating to the petroleum, forestry, food and car rental industries.
