No more proof of vaccination in Alberta

9 February 2022

Canadian Employment Law Updates - COVID-19

Starting today, the Government of Alberta has implemented the first step of a three-step plan to lift province-wide COVID-19 public health measures. Individuals are no longer required to provide proof of vaccination with a QR code, negative COVID-19 test, or a valid medical exemption letter in order to enter businesses or entities in the restaurant, retail, entertainment, indoor fitness, and festival/event sectors.

Mandatory vaccinations in Alberta?

Canadian Employment Law Updates - COVID-19

The Government of Alberta declared a state of Public Health Emergency on September 15, 2021, and announced new directives to combat the ongoing impact of the COVID-19 pandemic. While the Government of Alberta did not impose mandatory vaccinations, certain businesses and indoor gatherings are affected by the new directives.

The Alberta government has announced its three-stage plan to lift health restrictions

28 May 2021

Canadian Employment Law Updates - COVID-19

On May 26, 2021, the Alberta government revealed its three-stage “Open for Summer Plan” with the support of the Chief Medical Officer of Health. This strategy aims to lift health restrictions using vaccination rates and hospitalization numbers as benchmarks, with each stage taking effect two weeks after conditions are met. Like many other provinces, this plan is a staged process lasting several weeks to oversee gradual openings in different sectors and activities. If conditions are met, the province could fully reopen by the beginning of July or earlier.
