Hong Kong: disputes over pre-conditions to arbitration go to admissibility not jurisdiction

10 August 2022

The Hong Kong Court of Appeal (CA) confirmed in C v D [2022] HKCA 729 that, in line with the generally held view of international tribunals and national courts, non-compliance with contractual preconditions to arbitration is a matter of admissibility of a claim for the arbitral tribunal to decide, rather than an issue going to the substantive jurisdiction of the tribunal to hear a case. This classification is relevant to users of Hong Kong-seated arbitration as parties will not, generally, be able to challenge arbitral awards on grounds of substantive jurisdiction for non-compliance with such provisions. As Hong Kong is a UNCITRAL Model Law jurisdiction, the judgment of the CA has considerable international significance.
